Introduction

1. The Heygate Estate

2. The design proposal

The Heygate Estate

Heygate Estate construction

- 1974 post-war reconstruction
- Housing clearance and bomb damage
- Mono-tenure development

1970s design focussed on the car

- Dominance of the car
- Pedestrians on elevated walkways

The estate creating barriers

- Creating a "fortress"
- Poor connections to the neighbouring areas

With no activity at street level

- Forcing pedestrians to high level
- Blank frontages with no active uses

No access through the site

- No permeability at the edges
- Blank non-active elevations

Creating an unwelcoming environment

- Unsafe and poorly maintained
- Failed housing model and building fabric
- Negative perception of place

But in a fantastically central location

- All the benefits of zone 1
- Transport hub
- Central London

With valuable existing trees

- Unique urban landscape (406 existing trees)
- Mature London Planes

In a context of cultural richness and diversity

- Rich and varied local community
- Range of existing facilities and surviving historic buildings
- Unique area of London – distinctive local identity

With high quality local housing

- Quiet residential streets
- Good quality housing stock beyond the estate

The design proposal

The aim is to re-establish Elephant & Castle as a flourishing urban quarter by ...

1. Removing the barriers ...

- Taking the blocks away and opening the site

2. Re-establishing connections ...

- Linking with the context
- Re-establishing the urban grain

3. Creating focus ...

- Defining a central destination
- Retaining trees and creating a park at the heart of the scheme

4. Defining streets and spaces ...

- Creating a variety of linked spaces
- Creating a variety of street characters
- Creating well-proportioned plots

5. Establishing a new urban quarter ...

- Delivering a mixed use district
- Providing new shops, restaurants, offices, homes and community uses
